Ms. Elinich:
I am writing to share a positive story about a faculty member in your department. At Success Fest earlier this week, a student named [redacted] (I did not catch her last name) was telling me about the encouragement and support she was receiving from a CIT instructor. [redacted] is a nontraditional student and not very good with computers so she was feeling anxious and uncertain about her success. She said, however, that her instructor, Coral Sheldon-Hess, has been extremely helpful and built her confidence. She said she has many questions which she is worried are basic or even "dumb," but Coral has been kind enough to answer them all without judgment.

I wanted to share this story because we far too often notice the negative when all the positive stuff is always all around us.
